AND NEARBY CEMETERIES
LISTS
OF REVOLUTIONARY WAR SOLDIERS BURIALS

The list has been taken from a record of Revolutionary War Soldiers buried in Montgomery County as compiled by Norris D. Wright of Norristown Pres. Valley Forge Park Commission at request of Montgomery County Commissioners. Of the 370 known soldiers who were buried in Montgomery County the record of their services in the Revolutionary War on the tax lists show that 277 men were residents of the county. 11% resided in Franconia, 7% in New Hanover with a smaller percentage in other upper Montgomery County Townships.

RELIGIOUS LIFE PRIOR TO STATEHOOD IN PENNSYLVANIA

By Mary Hudson Figner

Swedish settlers on the Delaware River as early as the middle of the seventeenth century had established their Lutheran churches within the boundaries of what is now the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania; religious history in the Province however, may be said to begin with the coming of William Penn and the Quakers in 1682.

The original Quaker colony, down to the Revolution, continued to grow in numbers. Its history antedates the issue of a charter to Penn. A few Quakers in and around Upland, now Chester, held the first Quaker meeting in Pennsylvania at the home of Robert Wade in 1675.

Many other early sects in Pennsylvania sought religious freedom and better social and economic conditions.

The Menonites, who were among the first to take advantage of William Penn's offer of land, settled at Germantown in 1682 and 1683. Direct descendants of the Anabaptists, the Menonites received their name from Menno Simons, a Dutch priest (1492 - 1559) who at 44 years of age renounced Catholicism.

The Dunkards (German Baptists), possibly as well known as the Quakers and Menonites, are known largely by the quaintness of their garb and their quainter ceremonies, which include sacramental foot washing. The Dunkard immigration from Germany took place between 1719 and 1729, the new comers settling in Berks, Montgomery and Lancaster Counties. Ephrata Cloisters, a religious community on the banks of Calico Creek, was self contained, self sustaining and co-operative. It became a center of religious music through its singing school and choir. Known following the Revolution the community gradually declined.

The Moravians of Pennsylvania came from Saxony where, fleeing Bohemia and Moravia, they had found refuge from religious persecution on the eve of of Count Nicholas Ludwig VonZinzendorf. In 1735 the Count transferred them to Georgia. In 1746 George Whitefield, the evangelist, provided work for them in Pennsylvania. The Moravians settled Bethlehem and Nazareth.

The immigration of the Schwenkfelders, a small German sect, was begun by ten families who arrived at Philadelphia in 1733. They were followed a year later by fifty other families. The name of the sect came from its founder, Casper VonSchwenfeld, a German nobleman.

The history of Methodism in the State began in 1768 with the visit to Philadelphia of Captain Thomas Webb, a British Army officer who had been converted by John Wesley's preaching against blasphemy and profanity among soldiers. Webb first held services in Philadelphia.

Presbyterianism in Pennsylvania traces its history to the early days of the colony. In 1692 the Reverend Francis Makemie, who had settled in Maryland in 1683, came to Philadelphia to minister to Presbyterians. Six years later Jedediah Andrews, a licentiate and graduate of Harvard, conducted services in the Barbadoes Warehouse at Second and Chestnut Streets. In 1701 Andrews was ordained and installed as a pastor, but it was not until three years later that a consecrated church was used. From the Buttonwood Church at Market and Bank Streets grew the first American Presbytery in 1705 or 1706.

The history of the Lutheran Church in Pennsylvania begins with the early Dutch and Swedes along the Delaware. English Lutherans held services in Philadelphia as early as 1694; and the first German Lutheran Congregation was organized about 1703 at New Hanover. The Patriarch, Dr. Henry Melchoir Muhlenberg, who arrived in 1742, gathered the Lutherans into congregations, procured suitable ministers and established a systematic form of church government.

The Evangelical and Reformed Church, formerly the German Reformed Church, rivals the Lutheran in age in Pennsylvania. The earliest Reformed Churches in the State were of Dutch rather than German origin; the first congregations were established ^{by} Paules VanVleck in 1710 at Bensalem and Neshaminy.

The earliest Baptist Church in Pennsylvania, made up of English and Welch communicants, was organized by the Reverend Thomas Dungan at Cold Spring in 1684. The first church, however, was established at Pennypack in Lower Dublin in 1688, with the Reverend Elias Keach as minister.

The Congregational Church was introduced into Pennsylvania shortly before the Revolution by Connecticut settlers in the Wyoming Valley.

The Unitarians, who appeared about the same time as the Congregationalists, founded in Philadelphia the first Unitarian Church in America, organized in 1796 by Dr. Joseph E. Priestly.

The Episcopalians first held service in the colony in 1695 and Christ Church, Philadelphia, became the center of their activities.

The first Roman Catholic Parish in Pennsylvania was at St. Joseph's in Philadelphia, established between 1731 and 1733 by Father Joseph Greaton, a Jesuit.

Date of Statehood: Pennsylvania New State Government was organized March 4, 1776. The change from Proprietary Government to State Government took place June 18, 1776

Gloria Dei (Old Swedes) Church, Philadelphia, is the oldest church in Pennsylvania and the oldest in the United States in continuous service. It was founded in 1642, erected in 1700. The cornerstone was laid in 169- (?) in the presence of William Penn and John Markham. The church contains the font, bell and altar carving brought from Gathensburg by the first permanent white settlers of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania. Justus Faulkner, the first clergyman to be ordained in "Colonial America", received the laying on of hands here in 1703.

Old Pine Street Church, Philadelphia, was founded in 1768. It is the only Presbyterian edifice in Philadelphia preserved from the Colonial period. Two signers of the Declaration of Independence were attendants, John Adams and Dr. Benjamin Rush. Its most famous member was John Adams, Vice-President to President George Washington.

Christ Church was founded in Philadelphia under a provision in the original charter of King Charles II to William Penn. John Penn, the last male member of this line, is buried near the steps to the pulpit. The communion silver was presented by Queen Anne in 1708. The chime of eight bells were imported in 1754 and pealed forth the Declaration of Independence in unison with the Liberty Bell July 4, 1776. They were taken from the city with the Liberty Bell by Continental Congress at the occupation of the city by the British.

DAVIS, Jenkin, came from South Wales in 1700, his son-in-law Rees David (Davis) and his son Gabriel Davis. The variation in spelling became Davis, as evidenced by tombstone marking the graves in the churchyard at St. John's Pequea, Protestant Episcopal Church at Compass, Chester County, Pennsylvania. Church founded 1729.

1729, County of Chester was divided and the newly organized bounty was called Lancaster. Part of the settlement of Compass was then in Pequea, Lancaster County and Salisbury Township, Chester County, province of Pennsylvania.

1701 William Penn with a part of explorers, made a trip from Philadelphia to the Susquehanna River, with the intention of laying out a town on the Eastern banks of that river. On their return they set up their compass on the trail at the sight of St. John's Church, history of St. John's Church 1929.
